Nfl preseason tv games today

Over the past year, the NFL has faced a barrage of vocal criticism over its handling of a variety of issues, including concussions, domestic violence, and Deflategate. But when the season finally began, a different sound prevailed: cha-ching! In fact, it seems that the country's most popular sports league is continuing to take off. The annual Hall of Fame game, the first of the preseason, enjoyed its highest audience in five years. The season-opening weekend games drew a record number of spectators - 19.9 million per game, according to the league. Monday Night Football ratings also surpassed last year by more than 10%. Forbes recently announced the Dallas Cowboys as the world's most valuable team with an estimated value of $4 billion - $740 million against No 2, football giant Real Madrid. And NFL game tickets on the secondary market are getting 5% more than they were a year ago, according to researcher TiqIQ. Even some alleged NFL villains are far away well. New England quarterback Tom Brady, in the triumphant Deflategate scandal, now tops in player goods sales for the first time in his long career, the NFL Players Association says. And Minnesota running back Adrian Peterson, who pleaded no contest to assaulting his young son, was not only drafted 100% by yahoo! fantasy league, but was started 100% wannabe general managers a week ago. E-mail: editors@barrons.com Justin Edmunds/Getty Images Football is back, and if you plan to head to your local stadium for a game, you may be tempted to buy food, drinks and, of course, NFL merchandise. There's nothing wrong with picking up a few souvenirs, but before you buy a football jersey, autograph or any other NFL gear, keep in mind that some things are good at buying in a stadium NFL store and others are best to buy elsewhere. Here's a look at the best NFL clothing and other items to buy at the game – and the swag that you need to wait to scoop up. When you buy your NFL game ticket, use any money you left wisely. Doug Pensinger/Getty Images When it comes to fan gear, cheap NFL jerseys are hard to come by. Nike, the league's official uniform supplier, can basically set its own prices. After taking over Reebok in 2012, Nike immediately increased prices in official NFL jerseys and raised rates again in 2014. Nike prices set for 2014 remain unchanged at the beginning of the 2017 season. Entry-level Game jerseys sell for $100, intermediate limited jerseys are $150 and top-of-the-line elite jerseys - made of the same material as players' jerseys - sell for $295 and up. Nike also introduced $80 Legends jerseys. On the Internet you can find relatively cheap sweaters, but you can also find what you do not put in the stadium: fake money. In fact, eBay has been warning its consumers since 2013 about the distribution of counterfeit sweaters sold on its auction site and even leds are losing the war The NFL counterfeit goods are sold online - especially sweaters, according to the Chicago Tribune. Official NFL NFL almost always price the same, no matter where you buy them. But when you buy them in the game, you can be sure that you paid for the real thing. Don't Miss: That's how much it will cost you to see a game at these Must-See stadiums across America. Joe Robbins/Getty Images Clothing isn't just a game of what will cost you the ball. When you visit the stadium to cheer your team, cold beer will be expensive, even if your team plays in a cheap stadium. The average price of beer draught at an NFL stadium is $7.38. No league team charges less than $5 for a project, and some teams, such as the 49ers, charge a $10 fee. You better split the case with your buddies and get as much pregame tail time. Here's who can afford Stadium Beer. The highest-paid player on every NFL team Christian Petersen/Getty Images The game used equipment is one of the fastest growing niches in the $1.5 billion sports relic industry, according to NBC Sports. The gear used in the game is exactly what the name means: NFL hats, sweaters, gloves, helmets, shoemakers and everything else that the player actually wore during the regulation game. You can get the game's used gear online, but it's almost impossible to verify the authenticity of the goods, according to NBC Sports. The market is littered with counterfeits, and people almost always need to hire a third-party approval specialist to make sure they get the real thing. Another option is to participate in reliable auctions which guarantee the authenticity of the goods inspected. But in famous auctions, tall rollers offer big money for a real swag. The game-wearing jersey sold for $101,000 in 2015, according to ESPN - and it was just a college jersey. The best option is to buy in a stadium where authenticity is real and you do not need to surpass anything. The Eagles are currently selling a pair of center Jason Kelce's game used gloves for $89.99, and Cleveland Browns fans can score a jersey that defensive back Johnson Bademosi wore in the 2014 game for $174.99. Christian Petersen/Getty Images If you're hungry for a hot dog in an NFL game, the best thing you're going to get is $3 - that's the bargain price the Seahawks, Ravens and Vikings charge. However, the average price of a hot dog in a football stadium is $5.19, and some teams, such as the Buffalo Bills, charge a huge fee of $7. You can always buy eight pack francs and grill them yourself in the parking lot. Matthew Paulson/Flickr.com If you're a fan of giant, plastic, bouncing heads on small plastic bodies, get your set in the stadium. You'll usually find a much better choice for limited and hard-to-find bobbleheads at the NFL pro store than you would at other retailers. Bobbleheads you can find elsewhere are usually comparable in price - at least for those officially licensed by the NFL. One of the most popular collectibles in the NFL for the New England Patriots Tom Brady is a Super Bowl LI bobblehead who sells for $34.99. You can the same item fanatics site, but you will not get a break on the price. Another best seller is the Dallas Cowboys' Dak Prescott Headline Player bobblehead for $29.99 - and when you add taxes and shipping, the price goes up. Read out: 20 ways to save great NFL games tetra images/Getty Images If you're a bosses fan, a framed panoramic photo from a sold-out Arrowhead Stadium would be a pretty sweet addition to your home sports hangout. It would be even sweeter, but pay $129 at MyTeamPrints instead of $149.99 at the Chiefs NFL store. Teams across the NFL sell colorful framed stadium photos in their pro stores that are equally priced throughout the league. In almost every case, you can find the same thing elsewhere less. Keith Allison/Flickr.com Autographed football memorabilia is one of many collectibles who can pay off big down the line. The FBI concluded that 70 percent of all autographed sports memorabilia is fake, according to a Washington Post article from 1996. In 2000, the estimated number of fakes was actually closer to 90 percent, according to the New York Post. In 2005, the FBI announced the results of Operation Bulpen, a spy operation that revealed that the situation has not improved significantly over the past nine years. Fast forward to 2017 and the autograph industry is still rife with fraud. SportsMemorabilia.com estimates that when you buy an autographed item, you take a 50-50 chance that it will be real - and that's an optimistic rating. Whether it's $3,049.99, the autographed, 40-year-old jersey of the Miami Dolphins perfect in 1972. season or 2016 Buffalo Bills Draft Day cap autographed by Cardale Jones for $19.99, two things are certain if you're buying in a stadium: One, you probably could have found the internet for less, and two, it probably would have been unlike autographed memorabilia, trading cards are easy to authenticate and easily accessible - if they don't sign or are extremely rare. On run-of-the-mill collectible cards, you're probably not going to find many steals in the stadium and may find the same card or collection at a discounted, online retailer less. You can get Ray Lewis' three-card rookie of the year collection for $49.99 at the Baltimore Ravens NFL store or get the same collection for $30 less SportsMemorabilia.com. A 1986 Topps Reggie White rookie card sells for $24.99 at a Philadelphia Eagles store. At SportsMemorabilia.com the price of the same card decreases to $9.99.
